INTRODUCTION

A well-defined mission statement is essential to any company, highlighting its core values, goals, and priorities. The statements serve as a window into the company's purpose, providing customers with a deeper understanding of what it stands for. In addition, a compelling mission statement can create a strong connection with customers, influencing their purchasing decisions and contributing to long-term customer loyalty.

WHAT IS A MISSION STATEMENT?

A company's mission statement is a brief and official expression of the goals and principles guiding the operations of the company. It outlines what the company wants to accomplish and acts as a guide for decision-making, illustrating the path the organization and its employees will follow. The mission statement is detailed, comprehensive, and memorable; it conveys the company's one-of-a-kind value to customers, employees, and other stakeholders. In addition, it reflects the company's culture and identity and is connected with its aims and objectives.

VISION STATEMENT

Just as the names imply, vision statements provide a crystal-clear and motivating picture of the future that a company aims to bring into existence. It defines the company's long-term goals and acts as a guide for making decisions and establishing objectives. Compared to a mission statement, a vision statement is broader and contains fewer specifics, yet, its primary purpose is to encourage and inspire stakeholders. Therefore, it is common practice to utilize the vision statement in conjunction with the mission statement to present a complete picture of the purpose and direction of the company.

MISSION STATEMENT VS. VISION STATEMENT

A mission and vision statement are two important components of a company's overall strategy and purpose. They often work together to provide a complete picture of the company's purpose and direction. However, most people are not aware of the difference between these two statements.

NATURE OF OPERATIONS

The nature of operations encompasses the various services a company performs to achieve its objectives and fulfill its mission. Therefore, this aspect holds immense significance in determining a company's competitiveness and success.

The vision statement paints a vivid picture of the future aspirations of a company. In contrast, the mission statement outlines the key activities, processes, and systems that drive the company's daily operations, which explains why companies make use of mission statements to define their nature of operation.

TARGET MARKET

A company's vision statement provides a glimpse into its target market as it embodies its aspirations and goals.

A company's target market encompasses the specific group of customers it aims to serve and the products or services it is offering to meet its needs. This group is defined by factors such as age, income, geographic location, buying habits, and more.

MEANS OF EXECUTING OPERATIONS

The mission statement describes how a company conducts its operations, including the strategies and processes used to achieve its goals. These methods are designed to be adaptable and flexible, allowing for changes in response to evolving market conditions, customer needs, and technological advances.

While the mission statement may change to reflect shifting priorities, it must remain consistent with the company's vision statement. The vision statement provides long-term direction and helps guide the company's mission, including how operations are executed.

In this case, the mission statement serves as the foundation of a company's operations, defining the steps taken to accomplish its goals while remaining flexible and aligned with its vision. A company can ensure that its means of executing operations remain effective and efficient by regularly reviewing and updating its mission statement.

HOPES AND DREAMS

Every company has its own unique future goals, and now that brings us to hopes and dreams. Hopes and dreams refer to a company's aspirations and expectations for the future. These aspirations are often reflected in the company's vision statement, which outlines the company's long-term goals and purpose.

The vision statement serves as a guide for a company, inspiring employees and stakeholders to work towards a common goal. It encapsulates the company's hopes and dreams, describing the desired future state of the organization and the impact it hopes to have on the world.

In contrast, the mission statement focuses on the day-to-day operations and activities that a company undertakes to achieve its goals. The mission statement describes how a company will fulfill its vision and turn its hopes and dreams into reality.

NATURE OF A PROBLEM BEING SOLVED

The nature of a problem being solved refers to the specific issue or challenge that every company tries to address. Since the problems to be addressed need to be identified before the commencement of operations, a vision statement would be employed.

The vision statement provides a broader perspective on the future impact the company hopes to have. It outlines the desired outcome of solving the problem, describing how the company's efforts will improve the lives of its customers, stakeholders, and the wider community.

This PDF File was purchased by Muchamad - kurniatisri952@gmail.com
Copyright The Business Model Analyst - https://businessmodelanalyst.com/ - Distribution prohibited

EXPECTED DELIVERABLES/CHANGES

The expected deliverables or changes are the specific outcomes and results that a company wants to achieve. Compared to the mission statement, which outlines the methods and processes a company uses to reach its goals, the vision statement describes the expected deliverables or changes a company wants to achieve in the future.

BUSINESS CONTINUITY

Business continuity refers to a company's capacity to maintain its operations in the face of unexpected disruptions, such as natural disasters, technological malfunctions, or economic downturns. This aspect of a company's operations falls under the purview of the mission statement instead of the vision statement, which remains unchanging. The mission statement, however, is adaptable and subject to change over time in response to various factors, as previously mentioned.

SUSTAINABILITY OF OPERATIONS/GOING CONCERN

Sustainability of operations, also known as "going concern," refers to a company's ability to continue operating into the future while maintaining its financial stability and meeting its obligations.

It's clear that the mission statement encompasses a company's daily operations and priorities, so it only makes sense that the concept of sustainability of operations would fall under this umbrella.

COMMUNICATION OF PURPOSE

The communication of purpose is how an organization conveys to its internal and external stakeholders its aspirations, beliefs, and goals. While the vision statement outlines the purpose behind a company's operations, the mission statement details the actual operations being carried out.

INSPIRATION

A company's source of inspiration is its vision statement, which is the driving force behind its aspirations and ambitions. Inspiration acts as a source of motivation, purpose, and hope, guiding the company toward excellence as it works to achieve its goals. The Vision statement outlines a company's future aspirations and provides a clear roadmap for employees to follow, serving as a beacon that directs the company toward its desired future state.

ORGANIZATIONAL CULTURE

Organizational culture shapes the behavior and conduct of a company's employees toward its stakeholders and is primarily influenced by the mission statement. The mission statement provides a framework for the organization's operations and sets the tone for how things are done.

GOVERNANCE

The "governance" of an organization refers to the systems, processes, and policies that govern the organization's operations and decision-making. It includes internal controls and guidelines that ensure legal and regulatory compliance and adherence to ethical and moral standards.

Mission statements are often used in governance because they provide a framework for how the company works, makes decisions, and acts. They also help the company stay true to its values and commitments. It establishes the expectations for how these stakeholders should operate and outlines the consequences for any deviation from these responsibilities. Therefore, governance is a vital aspect of the mission statement.

INTERNATIONALIZATION

Internationalization refers to the process of designing and developing a product or service that can be easily adapted to various languages, regions, and cultures. To succeed in internationalization, an organization must have a clear mind. The process simply achieves that goal, ultimately making internationalization fall under the company's mission statement.

STAKEHOLDERS' RETURNS

The term "stakeholders' returns" refers to the benefits that stakeholders, such as shareholders, employees, customers, and suppliers, receive from their investment in or involvement with an organization.

In this context, the stakeholders' returns can be considered a component of a company vision statement, representing a desired outcome for the organization. It is also essential for a business to regularly keep an eye on its stakeholders' returns, as this can significantly affect its ability to stay in business and do well in the long run.

WHAT ARE THE THREE PARTS OF A MISSION STATEMENT?

The mission statement is known to be clear and straightforward and to define the purpose and values of an organization, but what does it take to achieve that direct purpose of the company or organization in a simple yet well-articulated mission statement? Let's dig deeper and unfold the three parts that should be considered when creating a mission statement.

BRAND PURPOSE

Brand purpose answers the question. What does your company do? "Your products are for whom?"

Now that we are aware of the questions that brand purpose answers, the question now is: what exactly is the brand purpose?

Brand purpose is a company's primary goal or reason for existing, which goes beyond just making a profit. It sums up the company's values, beliefs, and goals and gives a framework for decision-making and organizational behavior. A brand's purpose should connect with its target audience, or the group of customers that the company is attempting to reach and serve. In short, the brand's purpose should match the values and beliefs of its target audience.

BRAND VALUES

Brand values are the ideas and beliefs a company stands for and tries to live up to in how it runs its business and interacts with customers and the rest of the world. These values are reflected in a company's mission statement, which answers the question, "What does the company stand for?" Also, what problems do the products solve?

Brand values also help make decisions, shape the company's culture, and decide what kinds of products or services will be offered. Therefore, understanding and expressing brand values is an integral part of branding. It can help a company stand out from its competitors and connect more deeply with its target audience.

BRAND GOALS

Just like brand purpose and value, the brand goal also answers specific questions, like, "Why should people purchase your products?" So what does your product accomplish for customers?

Brand goals are the long-term goals a company wants to achieve through its products and services. They give the organization a sense of direction and purpose and serve as a road map for success. They are specific, measurable, achievable, relevant, and time-bound and reflect the company's vision for the future.

The distinction helps the brand stand out in a competitive market and attract customers who share its values and beliefs.

HOW LONG SHOULD A MISSION STATEMENT BE?

The ideal length for a mission statement is usually one or two sentences, sometimes up to a paragraph, but the key is to keep it simple and focused. The statement should clearly communicate the company's purpose, values, and goals without being overly verbose or complex.

The goal is to make a statement that is memorable, inspiring, and easy to understand rather than giving an exhaustive overview of the company's objectives.

WHY IS A MISSION STATEMENT IMPORTANT?

A mission statement is not just a statement but also a declaration of purpose, and it is used to define and communicate a company's core values and objectives. Identifying a mission statement's importance can help a business set clear goals and succeed.

We have discussed what a mission statement is, the parts of a mission statement, and the rest. Now, let’s uncover the importance of mission statements.

MISSION STATEMENTS GUIDE THE COMPANY FORWARD

A company's leading guide is its mission statement, which helps to focus its efforts and ensure everyone is working toward the same goal. Think of it as a roadmap that outlines the company's goals, values, and purpose. Without a mission statement, a company would be like a driver without a map; they might get somewhere eventually, but they'll likely waste a lot of time and resources along the way.

So, once a mission statement is created, the company moves on to the next course of business: to map out plans to achieve the goals displayed in the mission statement.

In short, goals, values, and purposes can be achieved when

This PDF File was purchased by Muchamad - kurniatisri952@gmail.com
Copyright The Business Model Analyst - https://businessmodelanalyst.com/ - Distribution prohibited

there is an existing mission statement.

MISSION STATEMENTS FOCUS YOUR ENERGY AND ATTENTION

Having a mission statement allows a company to focus its energy and attention on what truly matters; as stated earlier, mission statements should be specific, measurable, achievable, relevant, and time-bound, and they should also reflect the company's vision for the future.

View the mission statement as a GPS for your business, helping you to stay on track and reach your desired destination. A well-crafted mission statement illuminates the company's purpose and values, constantly inspiring and indicating what employees should focus on to work together towards a common goal.

Overall, having a mission statement is crucial for a company's success and overall progress.

MISSION STATEMENTS SPARK NEW IDEAS

Mission statements can, in fact, “spark new ideas” because they are a company's ultimate source of inspiration and creativity. What makes it more interesting is that when everyone is involved in the development of the mission statement, it gives room for diverse opinions and ideas to be shared, leading to a richer and more comprehensive understanding of the company's goals, values, and purpose.

This PDF File was purchased by Muchamad - kurniatisri952@gmail.com
Copyright The Business Model Analyst - https://businessmodelanalyst.com/ - Distribution prohibited

The mission becomes less complex, as it can continuously be updated to better reflect your team and business goals as they evolve over time.

MISSION STATEMENTS SHAPE THE COMPANY CULTURE

A mission statement is essential to shaping a company's culture and guiding the actions of the company as a whole and each employee. A company's culture is built around its values, beliefs, and purpose, and a mission statement communicates these to employees, customers, and other stakeholders.

Moreover, a well-crafted mission statement also serves as an effective recruitment tool, attracting jobseekers whose values are aligned with the company.

MISSION STATEMENTS ESTABLISH CONSISTENCY

A well-structured mission statement serves as a consistent guiding principle for a company, helping to ensure that everyone is on the same page and working towards the same goals. In addition, it acts as a touchstone, a constant reference point that helps keep everyone aligned and focused, no matter the company's challenges.

Before making a mission statement public, a company should have someone else look it over or ask the team what they think about it to make sure it is well-written and easy to understand.

PROVIDES A POWERFUL MESSAGE TO THE PUBLIC

A good mission statement communicates a powerful message to the public, just as it has been repeatedly stated that the mission statement communicates a company's values, goals, and priorities.

In short, the mission statement should intrigue and inform the audience about the company's passion and mission.

DRIVE ACTION

A mission statement is not just a slogan, but a statement of purpose that drives action. A mission statement can also aid in creating a culture of responsibility by providing a criterion for measuring and evaluating success.

In conclusion, a mission statement is a potent instrument for driving progress and attaining achievement.

CHARACTERISTICS OF A COMPELLING MISSION STATEMENT

An appealing mission statement should be well-written and engaging. It should convey the essence of what distinguishes your organization from others without using clichés or unclear phrasing. It should also define what the company does for its customers, employees, and stakeholders. So, let's look into the various characteristics of a compelling mission statement.

THEY ARE SHORT

Effective mission statements are short, straightforward, and easy to recall. Being brief allows you to quickly send a clear, focused message to a group of people. The shorter, the better, because fewer words make it memorable. Keep it simple so that you can have a compelling mission statement.

THEY ARE UNIQUE TO YOUR BUSINESS

A good mission statement should be specific and unique to your business, highlighting what sets your venture apart and setting the tone for your company culture. However, keeping the mission statement simple, short, and straightforward shouldn't mean you should make it so generalized that another company can easily use it. Uniqueness is a key that sets your company apart from competitors.

THEY CREATE EXPECTATIONS

A mission statement has a practical purpose: to set expectations for everyone interacting with your company, from employees and customers to investors and other stakeholders. It tells them what to expect from the company.

So, in crafting your mission statement, strive for clarity and conciseness, but don't be afraid to let your company's personality shine through.

THEY ARE REALISTIC

A successful mission statement should not just set lofty goals, but also be grounded in reality. It should inspire and motivate, but it should also be doable and in line with the organization's skills and resources. A realistic mission statement gives the organization the tools it needs to reach its goals and move forward in the right direction.

THEY ARE MEMORABLE

Effective mission statements convey a company's purpose and values and remain in the minds of employees and customers. A memorable mission statement is one that is easy to recall, encouraging, and leaves an impression.

THEY ARE ACTIVE

A great mission statement is more than words; it is a call to action. It should inspire and motivate, driving the organization and its employees toward a mutual goal. An active mission statement shows what the company stands for and serves as a daily reminder of what they want to accomplish.

THEY ARE POSITIVE

A mission statement is a powerful tool that showcases your business's values and vision to the world. However, your mission statement must be full of positivity and inspiration to make a lasting impact.

So, always keep your mission statement upbeat and optimistic, and you'll be well on your way to achieving your goals!

THEY ARE ADAPTABLE

In order to make progress, a mission statement needs to be flexible enough to change and develop alongside the company. This ensures that the statement still does what it's supposed to and reflects the company's current goals and values. As a result of this quality, the statement will continue to serve the company and its stakeholders far into the future.

THEY ARE TARGETED

A strong mission statement is written with the target audience in mind. For example, the organization may make its mission statement more meaningful to its customers, staff, and other stakeholders by determining who will read it.

BEST MISSION STATEMENT EXAMPLES

Mission statement examples are widely available, serving as a source of inspiration and guidance for businesses looking to craft their own. These examples showcase different styles and approaches, providing insight into what makes a mission statement effective. Some of the best-known companies in the world have been praised for their mission statements, which are memorable and serve as a driving force for the company and its employees.

ADIDAS

Mission Statement: The Adidas Group strives to be the global leader in the sporting goods industry, with brands built on a passion for sports and a sporting lifestyle. We are committed to continuously strengthening our brands and products to improve our competitive position.

The statement perfectly captures Adidas' ambition to be the leading sports industry brand and provide its customers with the best products and services. Adidas' mission statement also highlights the company's commitment to sustainability, innovation, quality, and social responsibility. The company aims to create environmentally friendly and performance-oriented products and is committed to reducing its environmental impact through responsible sourcing, energy efficiency, and waste reduction.

ALDI

Mission Statement: To continually set standards for food retailing and to further expand the market position of the ALDI North Group.

Aldi is a leading food retailer established by two German brothers in 1945, and its mission statement encapsulates how budget-friendly its products are without depreciating their quality.

This statement represents the company's commitment to providing high-quality services to its customers and its ambitions to grow and become a leader in the retail food industry. The mission statement for Aldi explains the company's main goals and serves as a guide for its employees. This ensures that the company's actions align with its overall goals and values.

AMAZON

Mission Statement: “To be Earth’s most customer-centric company," where customers can find and discover anything they might want to buy online, and endeavors to offer its customers the lowest possible prices.

The company's commitment to making online shopping simple and convenient for its customers is emphasized in the mission statement. In addition, the statement's emphasis on Amazon's low prices positions the company as a budget-friendly option for online shoppers.

In 2019, Amazon updated its mission statement to "serve consumers through online and physical stores and focus on selection, price, and convenience."

Let's look into a little of the backstory of Amazon: Jeff Bezos, the founder of Amazon, used to work on Wall Street for the firm D.E. Shaw in the early 1990s. He was impressed by the growth rate of the Internet and saw an opportunity to build something “on top of it,” so he resigned from his well-paying job to start Amazon. Investors were hard to find, but Bezos was fortunate to have biological investors; yes, Amazon's first investors were Bezos' parents. Amazon started its operation in the niche of selling books, believing it could prove the viability of e-commerce by selling an item that was easy to package and ship. Amazon's sales were successful, so it expanded into several categories like DVDs, music, and toys.

But something seemed to surface in 2001: the introduction of the dot-com made Amazon lose 90% of its market cap, and many could already predict its downfall. But it took years for the company to get back on its feet, and a major change took place during that time. Amazon started to use a platform strategy instead of just being an e-commerce company. It built up its own infrastructure so that third-party stores could run on its platform. This change took more than a decade to finish, but by the middle of the 2010s, Amazon's third-party platform was the most dominant player worldwide.

Amazon’s mission statement declares its customer-centric strategy and how it has been essential to its success over the years.

AMERICAN RED CROSS

Mission Statement: The American Red Cross prevents and alleviates human suffering in the face of emergencies by mobilizing volunteers' power and donors' generosity.

The American Red Cross is an NGO founded in 1881 in Washington, D.C., United States. The mission statement effectively conveys the organization's goal of preventing and alleviating human suffering through volunteer mobilization and donor support. The statement is straightforward and concise, and captures the essence of what the American Red Cross stands for.

AMERICAN EXPRESS

Mission Statement: Become essential to our customers by providing differentiated products and services to help them achieve their aspirations.

American Express began operation in 1851, and it has always put customers first since then till now. The company's goal is to become an indispensable part of its customers' lives by offering products and services that set it apart from its competitors. By doing so, the company aims to assist its customers in reaching their goals, whether they be financial or otherwise. This customer-centric approach is reflected in the company's mission statement, which emphasizes its dedication to providing customers with value. The company's operation also goes in line with this tweet:

CUSTOMERS WILL NEVER LOVE A COMPANY UNTIL THE EMPLOYEES LOVE IT FIRST.
— SIMON SINEK (@SIMONSINEK)

APPLE

Mission Statement: To bring the best user experience to customers through innovative hardware, software, and services.

Apple was founded by Steve Jobs, Steve Wozniak, and Ronald Wayne in April 1976. The mission statement emphasizes the importance of innovation, hardware, software, and services in delivering the best customer experience. Apple is known for making products like the iPhone, iPad, iPod, Mac, and Apple Watch that are innovative and easy to use. The company's mission statement shows that the company is committed to this principle. Apple's hardware and software are used in many fields, like education, business, and healthcare. In the last few years, Apple has also made a lot of progress in the healthcare industry with new products like the Apple Watch, which can detect problems with the heart, and the Apple Health Records feature for the iPhone, which lets customers access medical information from their phones.

In short, Apple's mission statement underscores its drive to bring the best technology and user experience to its customers. It has always enjoyed rapid growth in markets because of this.

ASANA

Mission Statement: To help humanity thrive by enabling all teams to work together effortlessly.

As stated in its mission statement, Asana aims to improve team collaboration and productivity. This mission statement highlights teamwork and technology's role in developing it.

The statement demonstrates the company's dedication to positively influencing the world by offering a tool that can enhance teamwork. They have found a way to adopt the common tech motto; “making the world a better place.” And by doing that, they have successfully added their own uniqueness into it and created software that perfectly “makes life better,” by making teamwork and organization easier.

NIKE

Mission statement: "Bring inspiration and innovation to every athlete* in the world. (*If you have a body, you are an athlete)."

Nike has an iconic mission statement. The effectiveness of this method lies in the fact that it transparently lays out the company's priorities. For example, the asterisk next to the word "athlete" was used to explain further what the company recognizes as an athlete, "If you have a body, you are an athlete." This demonstrates to customers that Nike's products are available to everyone.

The brand's diverse sport wears its idea that anybody can train to be an athlete. Instead, Nike pushes people to reach their goals. Thus, it stands apart.

Nike has been at the forefront of the industry for decades by providing its clients with high-quality, fashionable athletic gear that is also incredibly functional. The variety of sportswear it offers provides a glimpse into its focus.

ORACLE

Mission statement: "To help people see data in new ways, discover insights, and unlock endless possibilities."

The leading computer company's business mission statement describes its long-term objectives. It shows that they constantly seek out novel ways to open doors and assist customers.

The Oracle mission statement gives clarity to 2 essential points:

- Impacting customers' business: Oracle's primary goal is to offer services that can't be beaten, and help customers see data in new ways. All of these things are mentioned in the company's mission statement, along with how the company works and who it's for. It is also one of the most popular and in-demand businesses because it has good database management and security. Oracle is a customer-focused company that tries to improve its business by making it easier to manage data and time.

- Inclusive presence: Oracle says that one of its goals is to give its customers "unlimited possibilities" through its products. In addition, keeping up with technology is vital to success in this day and age, making its software improve users' lives and be more manageable. Another important goal for the company is to reassure customers that its data management system will make a positive difference and global impact on their organizations.

OLD GUYS RULE

Mission statement: "To embrace a new breed of guys who have incredible energy, a passion for life, wisdom gained from years of experience, and the time to spend doing the activities they enjoy. Old Guys Rule should be worn as a badge of honor for a life well spent, but not nearly over."

The mission statement for The Old Guys Rule is unique because it talks directly to the people it wants to reach. To become the most popular clothing brand, the company cares about what its customers know and have done. So, instead of feeling down about "growing old," you can celebrate your age and achievements.

This goal statement has some good features. So, Old Guys Rule tells its customers to "wear their products with pride" and be proud of what makes them different.

PREZI

Mission statement: "To reinvent how people share knowledge, tell stories, and inspire their audiences to act."

According to the company's mission statement, Prezi's unique blend of slide animations and 3D experience is more than just a selling point. Every choice Prezi makes is based on the story you tell and the people it draws in.

The people who started the company think that one of the best ways to protect the environment is to make products that last for generations or can be recycled so that their parts can still be used.

If your company wants to grow and help the community, its mission statement should focus on how it helps customers and how it affects the world.

Patagonia is an original brand that has taken over the United States and abroad. They have a great selection of books and are known for their inexpensive and long-lasting apparel for all seasons. A customer-centric business, its products, and services aim to make its clients' lives easier, safer, or better in some way. To further assure the preservation of resources and the safeguarding of the environment, it also employs recycling procedures in the production of its products.

It can be deduced from the company's mission statement that they:

- Provide outstanding quality
- Improve life
- Save the planet

PAYPAL

- Improve Benevolence: Rotary International is all in when it comes to making a difference. In its mission statement, the group says it is important to learn about the world to find new ways to help people in need;

- Strengthening Capabilities: Social workers need to learn intercultural skills to help a wide range of clients. Rotary stresses how important it is to develop this skill in order to understand and respect the community's worldview and history, as well as its members' different points of view and needs.

RED BULL

Mission statement: “Giving wings to people and ideas.”

Red Bull's main business may be making soft drinks, but the statement makes it sound like it does much more. Its activities show this:

- Unique products and services: Red Bull is widely regarded as one of the world's most enjoyable soft drinks. Its competitiveness stems from the meticulousness with which it's manufactured. The exact high-quality requirements are applied to the company's other offerings;

- Enhance community life: The company is well-known for its extensive sponsorship of sports and teams worldwide. Red Bull's support of these events is meaningful because the economic and social benefits of the sports they showcase help communities thrive.

RIDE RICH

Mission statement: "To breathe new life into the motorcycle streetwear scene. We are a brand that acknowledges those individual riders who ride for freedom, not for ego."

With its mission statement, Ride Rich seeks to "disrupt the status quo" for motorcyclists. The "individuals who ride for freedom" are perfectly captured by this sentence. Also, its mission statement is on target because it explains how the company does business. Ride Rich is a brand that makes unique streetwear influenced by the visual culture, musical tastes, and cyclotourist lifestyles of regular riders.

SLACK

Mission statement: “bringing all your communication together in one place.”

The words "one place" and "together" in the Slack mission statement underline the value of group communication. Slack lets employees and their bosses send instant messages, share files, upload photos and videos, and do other things. It is also a reliable way for information to get from the top management to those who work directly for them.

Slack is an instant messaging platform that allows managers to communicate with their staff in real time. Coworkers and subordinates can have uninterrupted conversations, share files, and post photos and videos. It's great for businesses that have numerous teams working under the same department head, as it helps facilitate open lines of communication between them. In order to get work done effectively, collaboration is emphasized as a core value at Slack.

With Slack, you can connect your chats with other services and applications to save time at work, add context to your discussions, and expedite your usual activities. The Slack team's capabilities can be expanded through the use of the company's extensive app directory, which is made possible through collaboration with developers and partners.

Slack's main goal is to improve the quality of work life by facilitating communication and collaboration. The company's mission statement stresses the value of making routine chores fun for the sake of employee morale. It has an attractive and engaging layout that works beautifully on both mobile and desktop devices. Slack makes mobile app communication exciting for enterprises, and future updates will only make it better.

STARBUCKS

Mission statement: "To inspire and nurture the human spirit — one person, one cup, and one neighborhood at a time."

This purpose statement is concise and to the point. The aims are not stated in flowery language. To whom and to what extent Starbucks aspires to be represented is made clear. The statement makes the topic more than just coffee. It also talks about creating a community where everyone has a place.

Starbucks' mission is to improve the service industry while providing its customers with the best possible coffee and baked goods. The company's dedication to improving people's lives is reflected in its green cup duty.

Starbucks has risen to the top of the coffee industry by providing exceptional service that includes social responsibility. By all accounts, it has made a positive contribution to society and so accomplished the second part of its objective.

Starbucks has demonstrated coffee service does not need to be intricate and fancy. The company has differentiated itself as an industry disruptor by prioritizing customer happiness over profit through the use of cutting-edge, yet straightforward, approaches to service delivery. A large portion of the company's success may be attributed to the ease with which its products and services can be utilized, a clear indication that the business is actively working to achieve its stated goals.

SWEETGREEN

Mission statement: "To inspire healthier communities by connecting people to real food."

Sweetgreen's mission is to connect people to healthy, local foods, and the company's language reflects this. It has made great strides in the neighborhoods where its stores have opened by teaching youngsters about the importance of a balanced diet, regular exercise, environmental responsibility, and knowing where their food comes from.

But it doesn't end there. According to Nathaniel Ru, co-founder and Chief Brand Officer, "Our mission is to connect more people to real food and build healthier communities by doing that." As Sweetgreen's business expands, so does its influence. By making nutritious, inexpensive, and ecologically sustainable food widely available, Sweetgreen has integrated this mission with its model.

Tesla's mission statements are written in rousing, aspirational language. Customers and workers who share the company's concern for the environment will feel connected to the brand thanks to its emphasis on environmental responsibility.

Tesla's economic strategy is predicated on the company's intention to pioneer a global shift away from dirty and unsustainable fossil fuels. The corporation is committed to making this a reality in the automotive industry, thus investing heavily in developing cutting-edge technology for this purpose. Its vast choice of car models now reflects this approach and its accomplishments in quickening this transformation.

Tesla considers user feedback while building cars and other products, and the company's custom order service gives buyers more say over their purchases' final look and feel. This exceptional level of service is what truly sets Tesla apart on a global scale. Furthermore, Tesla is deeply invested in the development of environmentally friendly technologies.

TED: SPREAD IDEAS

Mission statement: "Spread ideas."

TED is a nonprofit company with the mission of "Sharing Ideas and Widening Participation." The short mission statement of the company welcomes people from all walks of life and cultures who want to learn more about the universe. TED is putting together a free digital and physical collection of talks given by some of the most intelligent people in the world; This is done to help spread knowledge.

The goal of TED is to get people to interact with each other and the world around them by giving them a place to share ideas and information.

TED encourages and supports innovative ideas by hosting a global community of thinkers, visionaries, and educators committed to solving global problems and creating a better tomorrow. The movement is founded on the belief that good ideas may improve the world. With the help of the TED Foundation, educators, thinkers, and visionaries may learn more about pressing global concerns and collaborate to find solutions. It is founded on the belief that revolutionary change may be brought about via the dissemination of brilliant ideas.

Its primary goal is to educate the public and dispel common misconceptions about the world.

UDEMY

Mission statement: “make quality education more accessible and improve lives through learning.”

This online education service (B2C) comprises two main parts: the Udemy website, which is for students, and the Udemy platform, which is for teachers. Courses on Udemy's central marketplace are available to anybody, while Udemy for Business is available solely to B2B and enterprise accounts. To this end, Udemy relies on two main groups of people: marketplace teachers and B2B platform teachers.

UBER

Mission statement: "To ignite opportunity by setting the world in motion."

The company's mission of "making the world safer and more connected through innovative transportation" ranks among the most profound and insightful statements ever written. This is a clear and concise assertion. Uber's mission statement calls attention to these points:

- Providing opportunities: Uber provides opportunities for riders and drivers through its platform. It fills a need for drivers, reduces the cost of transportation for customers, and helps the environment.

  As a result, millions of individuals, especially in developing countries, can break out of poverty thanks to the employment opportunities made possible by Uber through the Internet.

  It also allows those who have access to a vehicle or a traveling partner to earn some extra cash while chatting and gossiping on the way to their destination.

- Worldwide trusted transportation: The combination of Uber's pre-screened drivers and transparent star-rating system for riders has made it possible for them to travel together around the globe. Uber can serve customers in developed and developing nations thanks to this.

  Uber is working to keep the world moving, even when traffic or a lack of available vehicles causes delays. The idea of "motion" is important for making progress, since speed determines how fast things change.

UNIVERSAL HEALTH SERVICES, INC.

Mission statement: "To provide superior quality healthcare services: patients recommend to family and friends, physicians prefer for their patients, purchasers select for their clients, employees are proud of, and investors seek for long-term returns."

Universal Health Services wants to reach its goal by meeting the needs of its customers, employees, business partners, and investors. Its primary goal as a healthcare provider is to ensure complete satisfaction among its customers, which includes patients, doctors, buyers, staff, and owners.

U.S. BANK

Mission statement: “It’s our employees’ clear, strong commitment to our customers, communities, and shareholders. We put our mission into action every day”.

U.S. Bank has been one of the most respected financial institutions in the United States for a long time. They are experts in international, retail, and institutional finance. The financial institution's mission statement makes it clear that it is loyal to its clients, investors, and local communities.

U.S. Bank has millions of commercial and individual customers across the United States. The company's primary goal is to satisfy its clients' banking requirements by delivering first-rate products and services at competitive prices. Using best-in-class financial metrics guarantees that all customers may easily access their accounts.

U.S. Banks are unrivaled when it comes to helping individuals with their finances. The bank has made ethical and honest banking a primary goal since its inception. The Ethisphere Institute named it 2017's Most Ethical Corporation for its dedication to both customer and community development.

The following elements make up its mission statement:

- Service-Oriented Dedication
- Strive for Financial Perfection
- Commitment to Expand Internationally

VANGUARD GROUP

Mission statement: “To take a stand for all investors, to treat them fairly, and to give them the best chance for investment success.”

Vanguard is an organization that puts the long-term interests of its clients first by producing and dispersing assets with the same characteristics. Neither do they ever put their investors' money in danger nor compromise their principles for a quick buck, and they are constantly working to reduce investing expenses worldwide. In addition to solid returns, Vanguard's method also offers reliability, stability, and excellent customer service.

According to the company mission statement, Vanguard is committed to the long-term prosperity of its clients. The investment group creates and improves high-value assets with the goal of maximizing returns. The company's mission is to use a methodical approach to asset management to generate a profitable return for its shareholders.

It is clear from Vanguard group's mission statement that the company's primary focus is on offering stability and dependability to its clients and investors. Due to its track record, Vanguard has gained the attention of several pro investors worldwide.

It can be deduced from the above analysis that Vanguard's mission statement is drafted on three main points:

- Ensuring success
- Improving investment performance
- Stability and dependency

WALMART

Mission statement: "save money, live better."

Walmart's business practices, which include using low prices as a competitive advantage, are encapsulated in its mission, "Save money, Live better." A motto that perfectly illustrates the principles of their founder, Sam Walton. Sam believed that “the secret of successful retailing is to give your customers what they want.” This was evident in the mechanics of the company, even with the progression of modern society and technology.

This mission statement clearly reaffirms its business model based on discipline. In literal translation, we can see that to live a better life, one must learn to save money, a task that doesn’t come easily. And so, the company found an ingenious way to lessen the burden on their consumers by expressing this. With its business model and this mission statement as its core value, the company leverages pricing that appeals to the masses as a selling point that allows them to “save money” by cutting costs.

A lot of the company’s strategies revolve around the importance of reducing prices. By leveraging low prices as a strategy, Walmart easily achieves its mission. A good example of this is when consumers can save money by patronizing their numerous stores offering better prices rather than buying mid-scale or high-end retailers. Through these competitive prices, Walmart is able to stay on top of the game.

In summary, Walmart's mission statement and business model stand on the foundation of three key values:

- Price: Their low prices allow families to save money easily;

- Assortment: Walmart prides itself in being everywhere at all times. This is evident by the presence of its stores all over the U.S.;
- Experience: They leverage knowledgeable and well-experienced salespersons to assist their consumers, making the purchasing process more streamlined.

Mission statement: “Create a world where people work to make a life, not just a living.”

WeWork's founders anticipated and adapted to the ever-evolving needs of the modern workplace. They wanted to establish a more work-life balanced environment for young professionals.

WeWork's success stems from the fact that the company is able to foster thriving communities at each of its sites, where members can collaborate, network, and develop their respective businesses.

WeWork's business model is built on giving shared office space to startups at more affordable rates than traditional leasing arrangements. To accommodate their customers, they partition large spaces into smaller offices and communal areas, outfitting each with a desk and a full complement of office equipment. They also help startups by providing affordable office space where they may host client meetings and expand their company. Workers are free to come and go from most shard spaces whenever they like. As a result, WeWork is now among the world's most valuable startups.

WARBY PARKER

Mission statement: “To offer designer eyewear at a revolutionary price while leading the way for socially conscious businesses.”

This mission statement shows that the company is committed to giving its customers the best shopping experiences possible and wants to start a new era of competitive pricing.

Warby Parker set out to address a need in the market for stylish, well-made, and reasonably priced eyewear by partnering closely with its customers. Also, they care so much about their consumers that they let them try things on at home. They work hard to keep prices low so that everyone can have the option of purchasing prescription eyewear or sunglasses that suit their individual style.

The following elements make up the statement:

- Excellent craftsmanship
- Improving people's lives

> “To offer designer eyewear at a revolutionary price, while leading the way for socially conscious businesses.”

WORKDAY

Mission statement: "To put people at the center of enterprise software."

Workday's mission statement doesn't mention the characteristics of the service or how it plans to help human resources (HR) professionals improve. Instead, it takes a stand on how enterprise software is used now and focuses on its users.

This mission statement is optimistic while remaining sympathetic toward the industry it serves.

YETI

Mission statement: "Build the cooler we'd use every day if it existed."

Yeti's success can be traced to how much the company cares about its best-selling product (premier coolers) and how important customer satisfaction is to it. Because the company's founders admit that they, too, were fed up with flimsy coolers and other outdoor equipment, this remark gives potential buyers confidence that the product will meet their needs.

TIPS TO WRITE A PERFECT MISSION STATEMENT

Writing a mission statement can sometimes be challenging, especially for startup companies. So here are a few tips for writing a perfect mission statement:

BE BRIEF

Keeping your mission statement brief and straightforward can help you communicate your company's vision and values in a way that sticks in the minds of your target audience.

While making your mission statement, you should prioritize including brief answers to the questions below:

- What do you do?
- How do you do it?
- Who do you do it for?
- Where do you do it?
- What benefit/value do you achieve?

For example, Your statement can be in this format: "We [what you do] by [how you do it] for [target customers] to [ultimate value you provide]."

BE UNIQUE

Remember your company's unique selling points as you write your mission statement. What makes yours stand out when compared to other companies that offer the same or similar products?

Don't be so generic that any other firm may steal your goal statement and call it their own; instead, tell your organization's unique story.

KNOW YOUR TARGET AUDIENCE

Keeping your intended audience in mind is essential while writing your goal statement. So, your message needs to fit the needs and interests of the people you want to reach.

CREATE EXPECTATIONS

Successful stores understand the importance of anticipating the needs of their customers.

For instance, Microsoft says, "Empower every person and organization on the planet to achieve more." This gives hope to Microsoft customers for their empowerment success.

BE REALISTIC

Don't keep trying to cram too much into your company's mission statement. Please remember that your retail business must work here and now for customers to be happy. Your vision statement can be written in an open and motivating manner.

BE MEMORABLE

Determine the most memorable terms and phrases you may include in your mission statement. Of course, you shouldn't expect people to memorize your mission statement, but you should try to make the most important points stick in people's minds when they think about your organization.

KEEP IT POSITIVE

In your retail store's mission statement, you should discuss the problems you solve, the needs you fill, and the burdens you lift for your target audience. So keep your mission statement positive at all costs.

Keeping a positive attitude makes it much easier to look at things from different points of view and notice new opportunities.

USE ACTIVE VERBS

Your mission statement should have a sense of immediacy rather than sound like a rehash of the past. With action verbs, you may better explain the value of your retail offerings and how they address customer pain points and unmet needs.

For instance, write, “[Company name] makes [service] to ease mobility,” instead of writing, “These [products] are made by [Company name] to ease mobility.”

MAKE IT ADAPTABLE

After you've written a powerful mission statement, you may refer to it whenever you need renewed focus and energy to push your organization forward. For example, use pivot words in your advertising and new product development efforts.

Copyright The Business Model Analyst - https://businessmodelanalyst.com/ - Distribution prohibited

USE THE VIPS METHOD

You can also employ the VIPS method when writing your mission statement. The VIPS are:

V – Value
How much does the company improve the lives of its customers, employees, and the general public?

I – Inspiration
So why should anyone (as a customer or employee) care about your company?

P – Plausibility
It doesn't help to have a mission statement that is too big for you to accomplish. Instead, your stated goal(s) should be realistic and doable.

S – Specifics
It is important to ensure that your mission statement applies to your business and shows how your efforts will lead to the desired results.

HOW TO WRITE A MISSION STATEMENT

After learning some tips for writing a perfect mission statement, it's critical to understand how to apply them (writing a mission statement). So, here are some guidelines for writing a mission statement:

EXPLAIN YOUR COMPANY'S PRODUCT OR SERVICE OFFERING

You want potential customers to have a literal interpretation of what your company does. Therefore, you must provide a simple, straightforward explanation of your product or service. Your description should address simple inquiries like these questions:

- What are you selling?
- Why should your customers buy it? What makes it unique?
- What solution will your product/service provide for your customer?

Document your thoughts and center on your product or service's benefits to the target audience.

IDENTIFY THE COMPANY'S CORE VALUES

This is where you expand your horizons. You probably didn't create your product or service out of thin air, but rather to express some fundamental beliefs.

The guiding principles of each successful business may be boiled down to a set of core values. A compelling collection of values to add to your mission statement may be accomplished by establishing core values that are important on both a personal and organizational level.

CONNECT HOW YOUR COMPANY'S OFFERING ALIGNS WITH YOUR VALUES

Can your business's product or service help you stay true to who you are? Connect the dots in a way that the general audience can understand.

If education is one of your company's fundamental tenets, you should present your product or service as educative and explain how it helps customers educate their lives or business operations. In doing so, you are extending the offering's original advantage beyond its first intended use.

CONDENSE THESE STATEMENTS INTO ONE

A mission statement is a brief explanation of your company's goals and values; it might be one sentence long or several paragraphs. It would be best to outline the company's what, who, and why.

What
What the company is selling.

Who
Your target audience (customer demographics).

Why
The core values that motivate your actions.

MAKE SURE IT'S CLEAR, CONCISE, AND FREE OF FLUFF

Your mission statement should be an effective marketing tool, so make sure it's easy to understand and doesn't waste anyone's time. It should explain what value your firm brings to customers and highlight the shared objectives everyone in the company shares.

Getting feedback from your team or advisers by having them read the mission statement and suggest changes is a good idea.

COMMON MISSION STATEMENT MISTAKES TO AVOID

Here are some common mistakes to avoid when drafting your company mission statement:

LEAVING LITTLE SPACE FOR INSPIRATION

A mission statement that lists the things the company has done instead of explaining what it is for could be less effective.

Focus on more than just a laundry list of your company's activities, but on the overarching principles that serve as the foundation for your organization's strategy and the driving force behind your workforce.

LACKING PERSONALITY AND FUN

The most effective mission statements reflect the character of your firm. So even though it might be tempting to write a mission statement that makes your company sound polished and serious, it will be better for your organization (and more true to itself) to focus on the values and traditions that make your team what it is.

This PDF File was purchased by Muchamad - kurniatisri952@gmail.com
Copyright The Business Model Analyst - https://businessmodelanalyst.com/ - Distribution prohibited

USING BUZZWORDS AND JARGON

One common mistake companies make when writing mission statements is to drag them down with buzzwords and jargon. Instead, the most effective mission statements convey an organization's core values using uncomplicated language.

This PDF File was purchased by Muchamad - kurniatisri952@gmail.com
Copyright The Business Model Analyst - https://businessmodelanalyst.com/ - Distribution prohibited

WHAT TO DO AFTER WRITING MISSION STATEMENT

It's crucial to let employees know about the company's mission statement after it's been drafted. Present it to the CEO and the rest of the executive team and answer any concerns they may have. Distribute a company-wide memo, print it out, hang up posters, and reward those who can recite it by heart. Recognize and praise employees whose actions show that they care about the company's core values.

Spreading awareness and boosting morale in this way will make your business more attractive to potential employees. Focusing on what matters can be difficult for companies, but with time, effort, and a clear goal statement, your organization can return to the right track.

This PDF File was purchased by Muchamad - kurniatisri952@gmail.com
Copyright The Business Model Analyst - https://businessmodelanalyst.com/ - Distribution prohibited

CONCLUSION

The most critical points are that a mission statement should help an organization get everyone working toward the same goal, that concrete strategies should follow it, and that it should be carried out daily to have any lasting impact.

From the mission statement, the organization can figure out its core values, which will serve as its guiding principles.
